What to share with your students about

University of South Carolina Student Health Services

If they're ill or can't shake that cold

Recommend your students visit the Center for Health and Well-Being at the first sign of symptoms. (Consultations with our Primary Care and Women's Health providers are included in the student health fee that all full-time students pay).

If they seem to be struggling with stress, depression or other mental health issues

Recommend your students visit one of our counselors or psychiatrists (10 individual counseling sessions included in the student health fee) within Counseling & Psychiatry.

If they come to you with issues involving assault, sexual misconduct or dating violence

Recommend your students visit the Sexual Assault and Violence Intervention & Prevention (SAVIP) office. The SAVIP staff members are trained advocates who regularly accompany students for support (if desired by the student). For more information about dealing with violence and discrimination, visit sc.edu/stopsexualassault.

For more information about Student Health Services' programs, services and events, please visit sa.sc.edu/shs

Supporting the vision of a Healthy Carolina community