Shana Harrington, PT, PhD, from the Exercise Science Department in the Arnold School of Public Health, will discuss the value of rehabilitation for cancer patients throughout the cancer trajectory. Dr. Harrington’s primary research interests involve cancer survivorship. Additionally, her research career has focused on assessment of upper extremity impairments in women diagnosed with breast cancer. Dr. Harrington’s teaching focus includes evidence-based physical therapy, pain, sports medicine, and oncology.