Spring was a busy time at the USCL Native American Studies Center, and summer promises to be even busier. Thanks to our new traveling exhibit on the NC/SC state line and Prof. Taylor’s display on feathers in Native American culture, along with our participation in the city’s successful Ag and Art event and the Red Rose Festival, the NASC attracted hundreds and hundreds of visitors over the past few months. In fact, since opening in October, we have had over 5,000 visitors from 31 South Carolina counties, 25 states, and 16 different countries. With the opening of the traveling Smithsonian exhibit “IndiVisible,” we expect our visitor numbers to keep growing. If you haven’t visited the Center, come by this summer. If you have, come back and see the new exhibits.

The Shaping of South Carolina:
A Story of Adventure, Politics, and Boundary Making

...a South Carolina Historical Society exhibit

Have you ever watched the TV show How the States Got Their Shape? Well even if you did, this exhibit has something for you. Barbeque is not the only thing that helped shape South Carolina’s boundaries.

If you have ever found yourself wondering how South Carolina’s borders were really formed, you can find your answer within this exhibit. Sift through narratives of kings, political deals, Indian treaties and misguided surveys and explore this story with us.

The exhibit opened on June 21, 2013 and will run through February 2014. Special programing for school groups can be provided upon request.

For more information please contact Brittany Taylor at taylorbd@mailbox.sc.edu.

We have also had an effective grant-writing period recently. The NASC is receiving over $31,000 in grants from the National Endowment for the Arts, South Carolina Arts Commission and the MetLife/Smithsonian Community Grants Program. These funds, along with continuing support from Duke Energy and the City of Lancaster, enable us to mount new exhibits, host traveling exhibits, conduct fieldwork, host public programs, and expand our collections over the coming months. We are very grateful for the support of these public and private funders. Of course, we always welcome new investment in the NASC.
During the spring 2013 semester, students from the ARTS 345: Art Evaluation class created an art installation near the entry desk of the Native American Studies Center. Using artifacts found in the Lancaster County communities of Heath Springs and Stonesboro, and donated for this project, the students created “Artifact Timeline” a work of art that incorporates projectile points, drills, scrapers, and pottery sherds. The piece sets up a visual representation of the thousands of years of Native American presence in this area as demonstrated by the artifacts. According to Fran Gardner, Professor of Art at USCL, “I wanted the students to have the experience of producing a work of art for presentation in a public space where many people would see it and interact with it. We wanted to use artifacts from the collection that would move them from storage and into an artistic and functional presentation. As a class we designed a piece that is conceptual, its idea drives its design; and authentic, its materials are genuine and original. Furthermore, this piece is an excellent example of artistic collaboration. Many had a hand in making it.”

The piece was designed and produced by USCL students Barbara Anderjack, Phil Brown, Tiffany Cutrone, Gabrielle Deller, Elizabeth Desantis, Brittany Frazier, Olivia Gray, Augusta Lee, Nick Vera, and Professor Fran Gardner. Chris Judge, and Frank and Andee Steen, provided archaeology consultation. In kind donations of materials came from Bob Doster, Speedstitch.com, and Rapid Signs. Special thanks to the Native American Studies Center and the Native Americans who produced and used the artifacts.
Smithsonian Traveling Exhibition Exploring
African-Native American Identity Opens at the University of South Carolina Lancaster’s Native American Studies Center

On August 24, 2013 the Native American Studies Center will open the Smithsonian traveling exhibition “IndiVisible: African-Native American Lives in the Americas” focusing on the seldom-viewed history and complex lives of people of dual African American and Native American ancestry. Through the themes of policy, community, creative resistance and lifeways, the exhibition tells stories of cultural integration and diffusion as well as the struggle to define and preserve identity. “IndiVisible,” produced by the National Museum of the American Indian (NMAI) in collaboration with the National Museum of African American History and Culture (NMAAHC) and the Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service (SITES), remains on view through October 10, 2013 and will then continue to travel to museums around the nation.

Since the arrival of Christopher Columbus in the Americas, the lives of Native and African peoples have been closely intertwined. From pre-colonial times, they intermarried, established communities and shared their lives and traditions. But racially motivated laws oppressed and excluded them. Blended tribes worked to preserve their land and rebelled against displacement. Their survival strategies included involvement in social movements, joining together to fight oppressive conditions and regaining economic sustainability. Their unique African-Native American cultural practices through food ways, language, writing, music, dance and the visual arts have thrived.

“The topic of African-Native Americans is one that touches a great number of individuals through family histories, tribal histories and personal identities,” said Kevin Gover (Pawnee), NMAI director. “We find commonalities in our shared past of genocide, alienation from our ancestral homelands, and the exhibition acknowledges the strength and resilience we recognize in one another today.”

“We are proud to have contributed to this important and thoughtful exhibition,” said NMAAHC director Lonnie Bunch. “African American oral tradition is full of stories about ‘Black Indians,’ with many black families claiming Indian blood.”

The exhibition was curated by leading scholars, educators and community leaders including Gabrielle Tayac (Piscataway), Robert Keith Collins (African-Chocotaw descent), Angela Gonzales (Hopi), Judy Kertèsz, Penny Gamble-Williams (Chappaquiddick Wampanoag) and Thunder Williams (Afro-Carib).

A 10-minute exhibition video highlights interviews with African-Native Americans from across North America who shared their perspectives.

The accompanying exhibition book, “IndiVisible: African-Native American Lives in the Americas,” edited by Gabrielle Tayac, features 27 essays from authors across the hemisphere sharing first-person accounts of struggle, adaptation and survival and examines such diverse subjects as contemporary art, the Cherokee Freedmen issue and the evolution of jazz and blues. The richly illustrated 256-page book is available online at www.AmericanIndian.si.edu/bookshop.

An online version of the exhibition and full national tour schedule are available at www.americanindian.si.edu/exhibitions/indivisible.

Support for the exhibition was provided by an anonymous donor and the Latino Initiatives Pool, administered by the Smithsonian Latino Center.

The Smithsonian’s National Museum of the American Indian is an institution of living cultures dedicated to advancing knowledge and understanding of the life, languages, literature, history and arts of the Native peoples of the Western Hemisphere.

The National Museum of African American History and Culture was established by an act of Congress in 2003, and will be erected on the National Mall in Washington, D.C. Currently, during the pre-building phase, the museum is presenting exhibitions, producing publications, hosting public events and offering an array of interactive programs and educational resources at the museum on the Web at www.nmaahc.si.edu.

SITES has been sharing the wealth of Smithsonian collections and research programs with millions of people outside Washington, D.C. for more than 50 years. SITES connects Americans to their shared cultural heritage through a wide range of exhibitions about art, science and history, which are shown wherever people live, work and play. Exhibition descriptions and tour schedules are available at www.sites.si.edu.

"Healing the Loathsome: J. Marion Sims’ Unreconciled Legacy of Racial Exploitation in Medicine."

One of Lancaster’s most celebrated historical figures, J. Marion Sims established his reputation as the “father” of modern gynecology through research performed on enslaved African-American women. Was Sims unfairly exploiting this vulnerable population for professional gain? Or were his efforts part of an earnest attempt to relieve human suffering? In this talk, Adam Biggs will discuss the complex ethical issues surrounding Sims' methods and consider their implications for modern medical research and his historical legacy.

Please direct any questions or comments regarding the series to Brent Burgin at 803-313-7063 or wbburgin@sc.edu. Mr. Burgin welcomes suggestions and ideas for future talks and speakers.

Language and Identity: USCL’s Native American Studies Center and Its Art Collection

In the material world we live in, have you ever noticed buying something because it was the "in" thing or because of the social status attached to it? Coach pocket books, apple computers, blue jeans versus a tailored suit, and fine art or folk art-- the choices we make in the things we buy or collect affect the perception others have of us. This concept of building identity holds true for larger collections and institutions as well. The objects that are collected create an identity that grows and evolves as the collection evolves. The identity of the University of South Carolina Lancaster’s Native American Studies Art Collection is no different--directly affecting the identity of Native American Studies at the University in the seven years of its existence.

Come hear about how this collection has evolved over the last year and how this affects the Native American Studies Center’s identity.
