TOPIC: WONDER WOMAN
This course offers a critical examination of Wonder Woman, the longest lasting female superhero. Created in 1941, by William Moulton Marston, Wonder Woman has made a profound cultural, social, and political impact. Wonder Woman has been represented in numerous mediums, including comics, trade paperbacks, tv series, films, and various advertisements. We will explore the history of the character development, including the many parallels to the creator's life as well as the publication history. We will explore important themes, including the connection to the U.S. women's movement, psychology and gender equality, domesticity, war and politics, sexual politics, audience interpretation and influence, narrative, and imagery and symbolism. There will be opportunities for both theoretical and practical, hands-on inquiry and engagement.

SPECIAL TOPIC: LANGUAGE, GENDER, AND SEXUALITY
This course explores the relationship between language, gender, and sexuality and how language use mediates the social constructions of gender and sexuality, in daily practice and in social institutions. Drawing on interdisciplinary scholarship, the course provides a broad perspective and tools for the study of gender, sexuality, and linguistic practice. Topics covered will include: ideologies of gender and language, cultural definitions and 'borders' of "masculinity" and "femininity" and their relationship to language use, gendered patterns in conversation, politeness, and meaning making, linguistic innovation and self-determination within gender-diverse speech communities, and the interaction between language, gender, sexuality and other aspects of identity. We will cover the different theoretical and methodological approaches that have developed in the last four decades to understand the complex role language plays in producing, sustaining, and perpetuating gender and sexual divisions in society, as well as the potential to challenge and transform them.
