Professor expects
'deluge of people
that will one day be coming to U.S.'

C. Grant
Jackson
Business Editor

STUDY
FROM PAGE A11

Data from a USC study will be used by federal officials to help persuade the Chinese government to allow more of its citizens to travel to the United States. The study, which is continuing now, will be used to argue that travel to the United States will benefit both countries.

More than 100,000 Chinese tourists are expected to be visiting the United States as part of official delegations when the study is completed. The study, which focuses on the travel habits of Chinese tourists, will be used to help persuade the Chinese government to allow more of its citizens to travel to the United States.

C. Grant Jackson, Business Editor

The study, which is continuing now, will be used to argue that travel to the United States will benefit both countries.

More than 100,000 Chinese tourists are expected to be visiting the United States as part of official delegations when the study is completed. The study, which focuses on the travel habits of Chinese tourists, will be used to help persuade the Chinese government to allow more of its citizens to travel to the United States.