Child Homicide – Abusive Head Trauma

Who should attend: Law Enforcement, Investigators, Coroners

Overview: In cases involving suspected abusive head trauma, also known as traumatic brain injury or shaken baby syndrome, the medical evaluation and diagnosis of the child is critical to the investigation. Forensic and psychosocial information must be obtained through law enforcement investigations to determine the circumstances in which the child suffered the injury. This training will include a review of fatal abusive head trauma and address the importance of medical and investigative interviews, timelines, and re-enactments.
