Welcome to the 2019 Media Law School

On behalf of the University of South Carolina School of Law, the College of Information & Communications, and the American Board of Trial Advocates, I’d like to welcome you to Columbia, South Carolina, and the 2019 Media Law School.

We know that, as journalists, you’re frequently called upon to describe developments in complex legal proceedings. Similarly, we understand that just navigating the intricacies of the legal system is hard enough, much less being able to succinctly and clearly explain them to your audience. That’s why we’ve pulled together a who’s who list of judges and legal experts that will help you make sense of it all.

This intensive course will provide you with a better understanding of the key stages of civil and criminal proceedings, an introduction to specialized areas of law, the concepts of due process and equal protection, and much more. By the end, you will have the knowledge necessary to confidently cover court cases and file your stories more easily, more quickly, and more accurately.

This event wouldn’t be possible without the support of the American Board of Trial Advocates, and their current president Michael P. Maguire. A big thank you also goes to Professor Carmen Maye who has worked diligently to put this program together.

We hope you will enjoy your time in the capital city of South Carolina, and if there is anything we can do to make your stay here more enjoyable, please let us know.

With warmest regards,

Rob Wilcox
Dean, USC School of Law

About the American Board of Trial Advocates

The American Board of Trial Advocates is a national association of experienced trial lawyers and judges dedicated to the preservation and promotion of the civil jury trial right provided by the Seventh Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. First and foremost, ABOTA works to uphold the jury system by educating the American public about the history and value of the right to trial by jury.

About the UofSC College of Information and Communications

The College of Information and Communications was created in 2002, allying the School of Journalism and Mass Communications and the School of Library and Information Science. The School of Journalism and Mass Communications is professionally oriented and grounded strongly in the liberal arts, offering instruction at the undergraduate and graduate levels, and exploring electronic and print journalism, advertising, public relations, and visual communications. The School of Library and Information Science offers undergraduate degrees in information science and graduate-level programs supporting the development of library and information services as an essential element of cultural enrichment.

About the UofSC School of Law

The oldest and only public law school in the state, the School of Law has a 150+ year tradition of excellence. But it is far from traditional. Its program emphasizes a hands-on approach that leads to a cutting-edge understanding and application of the law. Students benefit from the School of Law’s partnerships with the National Advocacy Center, the training ground for the U.S. Department of Justice; the Rule of Law Collaborative, a university-wide initiative promoting justice and human rights around the globe; the Nelson Mullins Riley & Scarborough Center on Professionalism, promoting ethics and professionalism in the legal field; and the Children’s Law Center, ensuring the best outcomes for cases involving children through education and training. The School of Law’s all-volunteer Pro Bono program is the oldest in the nation, and it is also the only U.S. law school to offer its students a course taught at Gray’s Inn, one of London’s four Inns of Court.

Kirby D. Shealy III

Partner, Adams and Reese, LLP

Kirby D. Shealy III is an experienced trial lawyer, having tried more than 50 cases, bench and jury, in both state and federal courts in South Carolina. He has handled more than 25 appeals before the appellate courts of South Carolina, serving as lead counsel in nearly all of them. Shealy has represented clients in a variety of types of cases, including commercial contract, copyright and trademark infringement, construction defect, products liability, title defect and catastrophic injury and death claims against trucking, manufacturing and other commercial enterprises. He has handled multiple cases involving the liability of directors and officers of corporate entities, has advised such entities regarding governance issues and has advised on multiple matters involving breach of fiduciary duty, unfair trade practices and fraud. In addition, Shealy has worked closely with charter schools on governance issues and on advising students, teachers and administrators on school discipline and employment matters.

John Monk

Reporter, The State Newspaper of Columbia

John Monk has covered politics, politicians and the courts for 23 years. He is known for watchdog journalism and his pursuit of complex public-interest stories, including most recently an investigation into public corruption in the South Carolina General Assembly. Monk received the 2016 Jay Bender Assertive Journalism Award from the South Carolina Press Association. He is a United States Army veteran.
Robert M. Wilcox
Dean, UofSC School of Law

Rob Wilcox joined the School of Law faculty in 1986 after practicing with Dow, Lohnes & Albertson in Washington, D.C., and Atlanta, Georgia. Among his primary teaching and research interests are professional responsibility, real property, and trusts and estates. He has written and spoken extensively on professional ethics, and from 2003 to 2008 he served as the director of the Nelson Mullins Riley & Scarborough Center on Professionalism. He served on the Chief Justice’s Commission on the Profession and on the South Carolina Commission on Judicial Conduct. He is a former chair of the UofSC Faculty Senate, a frequent presenter at continuing legal education seminars around the state of South Carolina, and a member of the Order of the Coif. He was associate dean for academic affairs from 2006 to 2011 and became dean on July 1, 2011.
